Food From Home

1. Introduction

If you are feeling a bit homesick or simply craving food that you used to eat back home during a certain time of year, then this booklet will help you find what your taste buds are missing in the Netherlands. You may be surprised to see how much international food is available once you know where to look for it.

Online shops

If you are short of time (or looking for convenience) there are a large number of online stores that cater for food from specific regions or for the international community in general e.g. www.orientalmart.co.uk.

Chain stores

Major supermarkets are increasingly stocking international products – often these are in a special section of the shop, International Section (wereldafdeling).

Markets

A useful website to check up the information of the open markets in The Netherlands : http://www.hollandsemarkten.nl/talen/?t_id=1&pid=9

The organic markets (biologische markten) are especially good for sourcing fresh vegetables, fish and lesser-known cuts of meat. They also often have an extensive health shop (reformwinkel) where different types of flour and a large variety of herbs and spices are available at reasonable prices.

While some markets are truly international (e.g. Dappermarkt, Amsterdam East) some specialise in foodstuffs from a specific region e.g. the Eastern market (Oosterse markt) in Beverwijk (www.debazaar.nl) or the Albert Cuyp market in De Pijp in Amsterdam (www.decuyp.nl) that caters especially for Greek, Moroccan and Indian cuisine.

Oriental supermarkets (Toko's)

There are many smaller oriental supermarkets in most towns in the Netherlands. To find the ones nearest to you, check lists on the Internet like:

www.tastyweb.nl/tastyweb/adreslijst.asp?id=4
<http://tokowijzer.wordpress.com/adressen/>

Turkish shops

These are also plentiful and always have good lamb in stock as well as really ripe fruit and many ingredients needed for Turkish, Chinese, Japanese, Thai, Korean and African cooking e.g. maize flour. They also stock bicarbonate of soda.

Health shops (Reformwinkels)

These shops stock tofu, rice flour and waffles, pulses, wholegrain wheat products,

Food From Home

non-dairy substitutes, organic fresh produce and some imported goods.

Websites

Cooking Dutch (<http://members.home.nl/cookingdutch>) is a website intended to give cooking hints to foreigners, mainly Americans living in the Netherlands. (info: cookingdutch@home.nl).

Fair Trade Shops: Check the website at <http://nieuw.wereldwinkels.nl> to find the nearest fair-trade shop – they often carry foodstuffs from overseas. If you are in or near Amsterdam there is a wonderful list of shops stocking international food at: www.allesinamsterdam.nl/item/41/4177/ia4177_nk.html

Schiphol Plaza

At the airport there are three shops that cater for international food and drink shoppers: Dufry Liquors, Food Village and Per Tutti. All are open from 07:00 – 22:00 seven days a week. (www.schiphol.nl)

Books to read

There is an excellent, well-researched publication written by Ada Henne Koene called “The Food Shopper’s Guide to Holland” (Delft: Eburon, c1996 ISBN 90 5166 777 9). Although it is out of print at the moment ACCESS still has some copies and it can be found at secondhand bookstores. In it you will find descriptions and illustrations of Dutch and other vegetables, an English/Dutch vocabulary list, the Dutch names for different cuts of meat and a list of weights and measures with their Dutch equivalents.

Linda Roosenburg has put together the illustrated “Rotterdams Kookboek” for the Stichting Madame Jeanet. This book gives recipes, stories and tips about Chinese, Indian, Malayan, Surinamese, Aruban, and Cape Verdean cooking. It also covers Eritrea, Africa, Iran, Turkey, Morocco, and Italy and has a section on Jewish food.

Website for restaurants

One of the best-known websites for rating different cuisines (restaurants) in The Netherlands:
<http://www.iens.nl>

2. Online shops

For this booklet a number of culinary traditions have been grouped into broad geographic regions. For each region there are a number of stores listed (by city) that stock relevant ingredients. The regions overlap and the list of food stores (and, in some cases, restaurants) is however by no means exhaustive, but we hope at least to have pointed you in the right direction. As to the opening hours, we only mention those that are outside of the usual shop hours.
